If I had been more careful, I wouldn't be here in this office fighting this parking ticket. I thought it was strange that there was a parking space open right in front of the theater five minutes before the play began, but who am I to question such good luck? In fact, there was a sign that said "No Parking" two feet from my car, but a very tall man was standing in front of it, blocking the view. No, nobody would believe that. There was a woman selling balloons and I couldn't see the sign through the balloons, so if anybody is going to pay this ticket, she should pay it-nobody will believe that, either. The truth is that I realize that if I had told anyone these absurd stories I would have to pay more money than I probably owe now. Where is the cashier's office?
